That's a pretty good explosion. I got a special kick out of it beause Mr. Feather lives and writes in the North, and the graduates he is talking about presumably come from those very superior and very expensive Northern public school systems which are alway looking lown their noses at illiterate Southern brothers.

The fact is, of course, that the schools are designed for children, not parents. If you are going to abandon the teaching of reading, writing and arithmetic in order to cultivate the arts and training that belong to real life, then it's the parents who should go to school and the children who should stay
